PART II—THE MANUSCRIPTS.

The Collection of Manuscripts now offered for sale was, with few exceptions, acquired en bloc by Mr. Hudson Gurney, of Keswick Hall (1775-1864) from the collection of the antiquary, Dr. Cox Macro. Cox Macro died in 1767, and 52 years later his manuscripts had come into the possession of John Patteson, M.P. for Norwich, who sold them (it is said for a trifling sum) to a bookseller of that town. The following year they were put up for auction (Feb. 1820) and sold at a very large profit; while 41 lots were bought by Dawson Turner, the rest were bought by Mr. Hudson Gurney. Many of the Macro manuscripts acquired by Mr. Gurney at that sale came from the collection of Sir Henry Spelman (1564-1641), the historian and antiquary.

These manuscripts were catalogued for the Historical Manuscripts Commission by Mr. W. D. Macray, and his account was published in their Twelfth Report, Appendix, Part IX (1891), pp. 116-164. The references given below are to that volume, and the Macro references are to the 1820 sale catalogue already referred to.

 This fine manuscript of Gower's only English poem is described by G. C. Macaulay in his edition of the works of Gower, Oxford, 1899-1902, vol. II. Introduction. p. 136 and pp. 161-2. The text is the third recension and it is apparently written by six scribes who differ very much in correctness. The first and fourth are very good and accurate, giving a text so closely corresponding to that of MS. Fairfax 3 (Bodleian Library) the archetype of this recension and the one which Macaulay has adopted as the basis of his text that it is almost certain it is copied from it. In the case of some of the other hands this exact correspondence in details of spelling and punctuation disappears.

In a letter to Mr. Gurney dated 27 Feb. 1899 Mr. G. C. Macaulay says :

[The Manuscript] has proved to be interesting in several ways and helps to explain the mutual relations of other MSS. of the same class. The accuracy of some of the copyists is very remarkable, so that for a large portion of the volume the text is very good.

The first leaf is a little stained and a few leaves at the beginning are slightly wormed, BUT ON THE WHOLE THE MANUSCRIPT IS IN FINE AND CLEAN CONDITION WITH GOOD MARGINS. Four leaves in all are wanting, three in Book III after line 1086 (between the leaves foliated by an early hand 51-52) and the last leaf.

- 140 INTERLUDE. A MERYE ENTERLUDE ENTITLED RESPUBLICA MADE IN THE YEARE OF OUR LORDE 1553. MANUSCRIPT ON PAPER. 28 leaves. A large wormhole through the last 20 leaves; the first 8 leaves also slightly wormed. Morocco, arms and crest of Hudson Gurney on sides. From the collection of Sir Henry Spelman. Macro 115; Hist. MSS. Comm. p. 164 folio (11½ in. by 8 in.) (1553)

 THE ONLY KNOWN MANUSCRIPT OF THIS INTERLUDE, which was edited for the Early English Text Society by L. A. Magnus in 1905. Mr. Magnus suggests that Nicolas Udall was the author and "one day some such adventitious proof as established him regarding Ralph Roister Doister may be found for this play as well" (op. cit. Introduction, p. xxii). It was previously printed by Collier Illustrations of Old English Literature (1866) vol. 1 and by Professor Alois Brandl in the Quellen Des Weltlichen Dramas in England vor Shakespeare. See also E. K. Chambers The Mediaeval Stage, 1903. Vol. II. p. 460.

"The play is divided into Acts and Scenes, and is a 'Christmas devise' (prol. line 6) by 'boyes' (prol. line 39). The place-names are of London. The controversial tone is Catholic, and political, rather than theological. Brandl, lviii, finds the model in Lyndsay's Satyre. Except for the Prologue (the Poet) all the characters are abstractions. Avarice, alias Policy, is 'the vice of the plaie.'"—E. K. Chambers. ib.

"The partes and names of the plaiers" are given on the first page, as follows:

The prologue.	a poete.
Avarice.	all. [alias] policie	the vice of the plaie
Insolence.	all. Authoritie.	the chief galaunt
Oppression.	all. Reformation	an other gallaunt.
Adulation.	all. Honestie	the third gallaunt.
People.	representing the poore	Commontie.
Respublica.	a wydowe.
Misericordia		} fower Ladies
Veritas
Justicia
Pax
Nemesis.	the goddes of redresse and correction.	A goddesse.

This is the only example recorded by Chambers of an English drama in the religious controversy written from the Catholic standpoint. Protestant plays were written by Bale and others.

The idea of the Play is that the realm of England, Respublica, has been laid waste by Avarice, Flattery, Oppression and Insolence. Under the leadership of Avarice they decide to extend their ravages, and in order to gain the confidence of Respublica change their names, Insolence becoming Authority, Oppression Reformation, Adulation Honesty, and Avarice Policy. They have no difficulty in deceiving Respublica, who is described by Magnus as a somewhat wearisome figure always lamenting, and stupidly pious. People, however, a clown, who speaks west-country dialect, is suspicious of Respublica's councillors, but eventually submits to them. In the third act the Vices reassemble and gloat over their gains, Oppression (Reformation) being jeered at for having secured only a pittance of £300 a year, though this was a large sum in those days. In the fourth act the discontent of People grows, but Respublica eventually accepts the excuses of her Councillors, and it is not till the fifth act that they are overthrown, when various Virtues appear and expose the Vices, and Nemesis finally dispenses justice. The Play ends with prayer and praise of the Queen—

“Now leat vs all together, bothe with harte & voice |
 In God and in Quene Marie mooste ioyfullie reioyce.
 Praying that hir Reigne mooste graciouslie begonne,
 (Maie) Long yeares endure as hithertoo yt hath doone.
 Praie wee forre hir Counsaile to have long life & healthe, Theirre soveraigne to serve. And to Mainteine Comonwealthe.
 Amen.

 This is the oldest manuscript in the collection, written about the third quarter of the 12th century. Some of the earlier leaves are missing and it begins with part of the laws of Ina (on a leaf numbered 46 in an early hand). Among the contents are :

Folio 49B. Leges Aethelstani Regis (894-940).

Folio 61. Instituciones Ethelredi Regis (d. 871).

Folio 69. Instituciones Eadgari Regis (944-975).

Folio 82B. Idem rex noster ita scripsit etc. Some passages follow respecting the reign of Henry I.

Folio 84. Henricus etc. . . . sciatis quia concedo & precipio . . . Then follows the Charter of Henry I respecting county courts.

ON THE TWO LAST LEAVES OF THE VOLUME (ff. 85, 86) THERE FOLLOWS IN ANOTHER AND SMALLER HAND (BUT ONE OF THE SAME DATE) A COPY OF THE AGREEMENT MADE BETWEEN KING STEPHEN AND HENRY II IN 1153 BY WHICH IT WAS ARRANGED THAT STEPHEN SHOULD REMAIN KING FOR LIFE AND HENRY SHOULD SUCCEED HIM.

THIS IS SPECIALLY REMARKABLE AS BEING AN EARLIER COPY OF THIS TREATY THAN ANY OTHER KNOWN. The copy in the Red Book of the Exchequer from which the treaty is printed in the Foedera is described as being more than a century later, and this older text supplies several corrections.

Comm.* 7

folio (11 in. by 8½ in.) THIRD QUARTER OF XV CENTURY
(BEFORE 1471)

 "The Libelle of Englyshe Polycye," a poem on the use of sea-power, composed 1436-8, was edited by Sir George Warner and published by the Clarendon Press in 1926. The following notes are based on the Introduction to that edition.

The poem is anonymous, but there is good reason for thinking the author is Adam de Moleyns (d. 1450), Clerk of the Council to Henry VI (1436-41) and afterwards Bishop of Chichester. It is remarkable as an early attempt to show the political and commercial advantages to be obtained by securing command of the seas, in this case referring only to the seas surrounding the British Isles and more particularly to that which separates them from the Continent.

The date of the poem is approximately fixed by its references to the Duke of Burgundy's abortive siege of Calais in July 1436 and the retaliatory English raid into West Flanders in the beginning of August. It exists in two slightly varying forms: the earlier is dated before 1438 by the two lines (8 and 9) at the beginning of the poem which speak of the Emperor Sigismund (d. 9 Dec. 1437) as still alive:

For Sigesmonde the grete Emperoure,
Whyche yet regneth

In the second version, which Sir George Warner dates about 1438, these 2 lines become—

For Sygismunde the grete and noble Emperour

Nine manuscripts of the poem only are recorded, of which four belong to the earlier text and five to the later. This manuscript has the later text and is the only one of either version in private hands. Four of the MSS. are in the British Museum; three are at Oxford (two in the Bodleian and one in the library of All Souls); and one is in the Pepysian library at Cambridge.

The "Libel of English Policy" is bound up with a number of other manuscripts in a thick folio volume; the contents of which are as follows:

- (1) "L'Arbre des Batailles," by Honoré Bonet.
This has the colophon:
Nomen scriptoris V. C. cognomine Moris
Calesie natus sit sanctis consociatus.
- (2) "Fortuna Anglie," in verse (begins: Flan. Fran. consurgent.)
- (3) In libro de dictis Merlini c^o vii (begins: Idus Novembris duobus diebus exceptis).
- (4) Les loys & coustumes de la ville et eschevinage de Caleis.
- (5) Form for a letter obligatory.
- (6) THE BYBLE (sic) OF ENGLYSH POLECIE.
- (7) Retenue of Edward III "in his hoost . . . duryng the siege of the toun and Castel of Caley" (3 Sept. 1346—3 Aug. 1347).
- (8) Lydgate's poem "The Churl and the Bird," without the prologue.
- (9) Disputacio sompniorum per philosophos.
- (10) Two recipes for the flux.

Inserted at end is a 17th century transcript of the "Libel of English Policy."

BINDING.—The binding was undoubtedly executed either in North-West France or in Flanders in the second half of the 15th century; this is clear, partly from the design, and partly from the end papers; the latter have an anchor as water-mark, which belongs to Briquet's group 365/393, all of Northern French—probably Troyes—manufacture, and found at various places in Northern France and Flanders between 1392 and 1479. The design of the binding—a central rectangle, divided into four smaller rectangles, each traversed by a St. Andrew's cross—is peculiar, and, so far as we have been able to trace, has been known hitherto to have been used only at the Abbey of St. Peter of Hasnon, between Valenciennes and Lisle (see catalogue of the Exhibition of Bindings at the Mons Library, 1929, no. 4). The three tools used on this binding are not used on the binding shown at Mons, and we have not been able to trace them elsewhere. They represent a two-headed eagle, a grotesque dromedary with a semi-human head at the end of its tail and a pair of dragons with interlocking necks; the three types are very common, and are found almost everywhere in Western Europe from Nuremberg to Oxford, but these particular variants are unrecorded hitherto.

The presence of Caston's inscription on one of the separate pieces as well as inside the cover seems to show that the collection was both made and bound by him.

Attention was first drawn to the importance of these inscriptions by the late Sir George Warner, Keeper of Manuscripts at the British Museum, who in the Introduction to his edition of the Libelle (1926, pp. xiv, lv) writes of them as follows:—"It is possible that the William Caston to whom the volume containing this copy belonged in 1471 was William Caxton the printer, who was then residing at Bruges. Both as a mercer and as governor of the Company of Merchant Adventurers, he must have had constant relations with the English staple at Calais, and a manuscript written there may easily have been acquired by him."

The matter does not seem to have been further investigated until the present catalogue was in course of compilation; and an adequate inquiry would be a long and laborious process, involving among other things a careful search of the Bruges city archives, in which Blades found references to Caxton and to the English merchants, although in the voluminous excerpts published by M. Gilliodt the printer's name does not once occur. From such research as has been possible, the following facts emerge:—

- (a) Caxton or Caston. It has been shown by Blades (ed. 1861, pp. 269-274) that in the fifteenth century spelling of this name s and x were interchangeable. It is true that where s is used Causton is the more usual form, but Caston exists and is once used for the name of the printer himself by his pupil and successor, Wynkyn de Worde (Doctrynale of Dethe, 'Enprynted at Westmynster In Castons hous').
- (b) The printer in 1471. At the date of the presentation Caxton, the printer, was not simply living in Bruges; he was preparing to leave it and giving up permanently his business activities there. His last recorded act as Governor of the Merchant Adventurers was in 1469, when he was already working on his translation of the Recuyell; early in 1471 he appears already to have entered the service of the Duchess of Burgundy; and in July of the same year he was at Cologne, where he finished the translation and apparently stayed for some time (an entry in the Cologne Register, recently discovered by Col. J. G. Birch, records the renewal of his permit of residence for 6 months from June 19, 1472).

The contents of the manuscript, although including some literary material of the kind which he afterwards printed, relate mainly to the problems and policies of English trade with the Continent, just such a collection as Caxton, the official head of the English trading community at Bruges, might have been expected to possess, and just such a one as he might have been expected to give away at the date when he migrated to Germany and abandoned mercantile pursuits.

- (c) Sonning. Of William Sonning we have, up to the present, found no record or trace. A John Sonning, possibly the son of William, was made free of the Drapers' Company (one of the half-dozen from whom the Merchant Adventurers in Flanders were principally recruited) in 1487; his master, Sir William Capell, Kt., was a Merchant of the Staple at Calais. (Records of the Drapers' Company, by courtesy of Mr. Percival Boyd, Past Master). Other Sonnings, Robert and John, appear on the roll of the Drapers, the former with a Calais connexion, a few years later: there is unfortunately a gap in the Drapers' records covering the period (1440-75) when William, if a member, would appear. A Walter Sonning was a member of the Fishmongers (cf. C.P.R. 1483, 359), another Company with Bruges affiliations. It can thus at least be said that the business connexions of the Sonning family were very likely to bring them into contact with the Governor of the Bruges Adventurers at the period in question.
- (d) Thomas Wall, who notes that the book was presented to him in 1528, was appointed Windsor Herald in 1524 and became Garter 10 years later. In the spring of 1527/8 he was sent on a mission to Margaret, Duchess of Savoy, Regent of the Netherlands: his report to Wolsey of his arrival at Calais and subsequent sojourn at Bruges is preserved. (Letters and Papers Foreign and Domestic, Vol. IV, Pt. II, No. 4008; cp. also Noble, History of the College of Arms, 1805, pp. 110, 121.) It is thus natural to suppose that the volume was presented to him at one of these towns.

The very strong cumulative effect of the above is perhaps best appreciated when we consider what has to be assumed if William Caxton the owner of the MS. was not William Caxton the printer. We must, in that case, postulate the existence, simultaneously with the printer, of an individual who shared not only his names, but his singular combination of literary tastes and special mercantile interests; who, having collected just such manuscripts as the printer would have possessed, had them bound abroad, not far from where the printer was living (see notes on the binding, above); who then chose, to give them away, the exact date when the printer must also have been disposing of possessions; and of whose activities, finally, no record of any kind appears to be preserved.

No book from William Caxton's private library and no scrap of his handwriting is known with certainty to survive. It is in the highest degree probable that in this volume we have both. The extraordinary interest of such a probability needs no emphasis.

- 170 MORALITY PLAYS. MANKIND, COMPOSED ABOUT 1475, WRITTEN ON 13 LEAVES, ABOUT THE SAME DATE—WISDOM, OR MIND, WILL AND UNDERSTANDING, COMPOSED ABOUT 1460 AND WRITTEN ON 24 LEAVES ABOUT 1475—THE CASTLE OF PERSEVERANCE, COMPOSED ABOUT 1425 AND WRITTEN ON 38 LEAVES ABOUT 1440. MANUSCRIPT ON PAPER. 75 leaves. Blue morocco with arms and crest of Hudson Gurney on sides. Cp. Macro 5—Hist. MSS. Comm. page 164.
4to (c. 1475-40)

 THIS IS THE ONLY MANUSCRIPT KNOWN OF THE TEXT OF THE THREE MORALITIES COMMONLY KNOWN AS THE MACRO PLAYS (except for the first 754 lines of the second play "Wisdom," which are also found in Bodleian Digby MS. 133). They have been edited for the Early English Text Society (Extra Series XCI) by F. J. Furnivall and A. W. Pollard, 1904.

- I. MANKIND. This, though coming first, is the latest of the three plays. It was written about 1475, for strolling players for performance in villages in the Cambridge-King's Lynn district. The text is 901 lines long. The second leaf is wanting. Mr. Pollard suggests that 2 preliminary leaves may have preceded the play containing the speeches of flag-bearing criers announcing the approaching performance (op. cit. p. xxix)

The theme of the play is the struggle between "Mercy" and "Mischief," the latter helped by Nought, New Gyse, Nowadays, and the devil Titivillus, who essay in turn to win the soul of Mankind. The scene is divided. Part represents a tavern of which Titivillus is host, part a "deambulatorye" outside.

In addition to the edition published by the E.E.T.S. the text of "Mankind" was printed by Professor Manly in 1897 in his Specimens of the Pre-Shaksperean Drama, and again by Dr. Alvis Brandl in 1898 in his Quellen des weltlichen Dramas in England vor Shakespeare. Cp. also E. K. Chambers The Mediaeval Stage, 1903, vol. II, p. 438.

- II. WISDOM, OR MIND, WILL AND UNDERSTANDING. Mr. Pollard states that there can be no doubt that this play belongs to the Eastern Counties and puts the date of composition about 1460. He adds "in several respects, and more especially in the unusual fulness and descriptiveness of its English stage directions, the play bears considerable resemblance to parts of the itinerant Eastern County cycle which foolishly goes under the name of the Coventry Mysteries."

"Lucifer seduces Mind, Will and Understanding. These are the three parts of Anima, who enters with devils running from under her skirts. Everlasting Wisdom effects a re-conversion. There are a number of mute persons attendant on the chief characters, whose coming and going "dysgysyde" create scenic effects, as in a masque. There are minstrels and a hornpipe, songs and dances. At one point Lucifer snatches up "a shrewde boy" (perhaps from the audience) and carries him off."—E. K. Chambers, op.cit., vol. II 438.

Mr. Pollard notes that the manuscript is perfect.

III. THE CASTLE OF PERSEVERANCE. Composed about 1425.

Mr. Pollard states that not merely in date, but in type this is the most primitive morality we possess with the exception of the Dublin fragment entitled The Pride of Life.

The play contains about 3500 lines, the subject being the struggle of good and bad qualities for Humanum Genus. On the one side are Malus Angelus and Mundus, Belial and Caro, aided by the Seven Deadly Sins and Voluptas, Stultitia, Detractio. On the other side are Bonus Angelus, with Confessio, Schrift, Penitencia, and the Six Divine Graces. Amongst other episodes Humanum Genus is besieged in the Castle of Perseverance. At the end Misericordia, Justitia, Pax, and Veritas dispute in Heaven and Pater sedens in trono inclines to mercy.

In his Introduction to the E.E.T.S. edition, Mr. Pollard writes :

"In one feature of some little importance the Castle of Perseverance differs from all other plays that have come down to us, namely, in having attached to it, in the unique manuscript in which it is preserved, an illustration or ground-plan of the stage arrangements . . . Our first impression is that it looks very ambitious, and that if an itinerant company thus dug ditches or raised palisades they must have done business on a very large scale."—Op.cit. Introduction, p.xxvii.

In his additional note, Dr. Furnivall adds that he believes the only other plays having like plans are the three Cornish ones edited and translated by Mr. Edwin Norris in 1859.—ib. p. xxxiii

This plan of the stage and indications of mise en scene on the last page of the manuscript are reproduced by Sharp in his Dissertation on the Coventry Mysteries (1825), and a description of them is given by Mr. E. K. Chambers Mediaeval Stage, II, p. 437.

Mr. Pollard notes that two leaves are missing from the manuscript; one after the leaf foliated 170 (p. 124 of the printed text; stanza 137, line 1604), the other after the leaf foliated 182 (p. 167 of the printed text; stanza 260, line 3030). Several leaves have also been misbound, and Mr. Pollard gives the correct order in his analysis of the binding on pages xxxi-xxxii of his Introduction.

These plays are three of the half-dozen extant English moralities which can with any plausibility be assigned to the fifteenth century. The other three are the fragmentary Pride of Life, previously mentioned, which is the earliest of the group; and Everyman, both based upon a motive akin to that of the Dance of Death. In the third, Mundus et Infans, the conflict of Vice and Virtue is resumed, as in the three moralities of the Macro manuscript. Cp. Chambers' Mediaeval Stage. II, p. 155.

 The minute-book begins with a set of rules, drawn up at a conference 22 Oct. 1582, to which the autograph signatures of 20 ministers are added. The first meeting was held 3 Dec. 1582, and the last (the eightieth, 2 June 1589). There are frequent notices of citation before the Bishop and Archbishop for refusing subscription and the wearing the surplice, and the compiler of the manuscript, Richard Parker, is himself suspended. After the entry of the last meeting he adds the following note (f. 234):

"Thus longe contynued through Gods mercie this blessed meetinge, and now yt ended by the malice of Satan. Some cause of it was compleints against us preferred to the B. of London, for which cause I was called up to London and examyned of it; but the chiefest cause was the death of some of our brethren and their departure from us to other places. Blessed be God for ever."

On the following 27 leaves are copies of papers etc. read at the meetings recorded in the preceding minutes, copies of letters (including a letter from Richard Parker on his suspension 1588); requests to the Archdeacon of Colchester

This very interesting record, especially with reference to the history of Nonconformity in Essex, ends with the following note by the writer:

"The letters which I have here written from one godlie mynister to another, these subscriptions, & the rest of the writings following, I inserted them together in this booke because they were conferred of in our meetings . . . This booke I fynished in Kettringham . . . ended I say the 10th of July, 1604. Richard Parker. Laus Deo."

The "writings following" mentioned above, with references upon some of them to the meetings, occupy the next 19 leaves (ff. 262-280).

 First published by Sir James Ware in 1633.

"A work of very considerable knowledge and shrewdness, the fruit of keen observation and assiduous thought. Spenser wrote of Ireland altogether from the point of view of the Elizabethan Englishman. He allowed no recognition of Irish claims or rights. English laws were to be enforced and Irish nationality to be uprooted by the sword . . . other Irish writers assert that Spenser's harsh sentiments long rendered his name abhorrent to the native population." —Dict. of Nat. Biog. art. EDMUND SPENSER.

Attention has recently been drawn by Mr. Rudolf Gottfried (Times Literary Supplement, Feb. 8, 1936) to the use made of this treatise by Spenser's contemporaries seeking information about Ireland.
